Abstract

This study was conducted to determine the experienced effects of teenage pregnancy to the lives of mothers such as emotional, mental, physical and social, as well as, their coping mechanism after the pregnancy. The respondents of this study were the selected students of JBLEFMU-Molo who were victims of early and teen pregnancy. The data of this evaluative case study were gathered using semi-structured open-ended interview questionnaire as data gathering tool modified by the researchers. Respondents suffered from the criticism of other people in order to escape the tremendous experience. The bodily structure of the respondents had changed. They experienced to be left alone by their boyfriends after knowing that they were pregnant. Emotionally some of them became depressed but was strong enough to face the problem and deal with it. Despite the things that had happened
