Abstract

The present study aimed to determine students' perception towards the Customs profession. The researcher employed the descriptive survey method of research in this study. The participants of the study are the whole population (163) of the BSCA of JBLFMU-Molo, Inc., SY 2010-2011. To gather the data, the questionnaire designed by the group was validated by a panel composed of four members. To analyze the data, frequency count, ranking, and percentage were used. The measurement scale was ordinal. Results showed that BSCA students' perception as an entire group is "It is a versatile profession that serves the private and public sector." There are similarities in students' perception when they were grouped according to gender, year level, place of residence and enrolment decision influence.
